When the ball falls, it accelerates due to the force of gravity. This acceleration is constant.

When the stick falls, not all parts of the stick accelerate at the same rate. Parts that are farther away from the pivot point fall faster—some even fall at a faster rate than the acceleration of gravity.

The cup where the ball lands falls faster than the ball and reaches the table first. The ball falls slower and lands afterwards.